EXCERP FROM SACRED SIGNPOSTS

Kerrie Erwin, Psychic and Medium

The Chinese believe each home we live in has its own spirit and energy and won't live in a home unless the number is seen as fortuitous. The number of the home has to be a good energy, whether as the original number or the sum if it is multiple numbers forming together. Everything from luck, health, prosperity, energy and future depends on this for their future and their family. Numbers play a significant role in other cultures as well. Consider the superstitions around the number 13. In many cultures this number is believed to be unlucky. There are many historic reasons why this may be believed but if you look at it from a numerology perspective and add the two digits together: 1+3 it adds up to 4 which is an inauspicious number in Numerology. In Cantonese the word for death and the number four sound very similar so the Chinese avoid real estate with the number 4 in it. In certain cultures your house number alone can determine your home's resale value. To neutralise the negative effects of a dreaded number you can encircle the number in the signage and all negative effects will disappear. You will be able to move into your new home, confident that no negative energies will be drawn to your home.

House number one – This is a number of responsibility and can make the occupant feel alone. This is a house for someone independent who has or wants a high-level job or career.

Some people believe it may be unlucky but that depends on your beliefs, what is agreed is that life in this number house may go in unexpected directions. This house will be better suited to people who can go with the flow and are accepting of what the universal Chi energy gives them. Sometimes this home energy number can indicate isolation or loneliness.

House number five – This is a great number for running a business from home as it is a high energy with many things going on for the occupants. If you are planning on having a quiet family life this is not the right number for you as this number attracts people that like to be busy and travel. This home is often a good investment.

House number seven – This is a home that is renowned for problems with plumbing and structure. It is also a number that holds memories and is sensitive to energies. People that are sensitive need to be careful of their health.

House number eight – This is an energy home that is perfect for older people or younger people that are mature. This is a great home for relationships, careers and will often take the occupants through a positive phase. It also suggests looking after your diet. Opportunities are high for people wanting to make the most of their natural gifts or talents.

House number nine – be careful with this home as sometimes it can attract problems with neighbours. Zodiac signs like Aries and Scorpios will be attracted to this number, as it will help them advance with their careers no matter what it is. Travel is indicated as well for the occupants of this home and books and literature is indicated as well. This number will also bring out your natural hidden talents. It can also indicate accidents, so be careful.

Think about when we trust and learn to use our intuition all the time in our daily lives. If we can get better information and certain feelings about people, places and confusing situations we are able to get a clearer and bigger picture of what is going on in our world. By recognising patterns in our daily lives we can avoid unnecessary mistakes. Taking a spiritual perspective and understanding how energy works will help us attract the right people in our lives and bring more harmony and balance. Numbers can give us important information and are a powerful tool or way to tune into a psychic link to our subconscious minds
